Abstract (Basic): EP 1071272 A2

NOVELTY - The inventive method for authorizing and producing printed images includes transmission of a suitable digital image file over a channel, of e.g. the Internet, to a receiving agency. The file includes also authorization information for making images from the file, displayed on a receiver, enabling acceptability for production of selected images to be made. If acceptability/authorization are approved, printed copies of the approved image may be made at a designated station, by thermal, electrophotographic, ink-jet or photographic printer.

USE - To provide transmission and approval of digital image file before printing hard-copy images such as postage stamps .

ADVANTAGE - More flexible and economic process than prior art gravure printing processes, which are expensive and unsuitable for small quantity production, e.g. less than 1000 printed copies, enabling inspection of image file for acceptability before printing, e.g. personal images causing offence can be rejected, also enabling image transmission from alternative sources to digital files, e.g. photographic print/negative, photo-CD, CD-ROM or DVD (Digital Versatile Disk), enabling more comprehensive printing processes than prior art 'vending machine' apparatus, in special booths set up for the purpose.

DESCRIPTION OF DRAWING(S) - The drawing illustrates in block diagram form remote selection/transmission of digital file to receiving agency for production e.g. of postage stamps .

NOVELTY - The digital camera (11) has memory (51) to store captured digitized scene image, a printer and logic unit and controller. The logic unit and controller has advancing unit, which is responsive to captured digitized scene image and advances the receiver, for providing signals to enabled printer and for causing the printer to print an image on receiver in relation to authentication information on receiver.

DETAILED DESCRIPTION - The camera has an image sensor (40) to capture and digitize an image. The digitized image is stored in the memory. The cartridge (10) has security control circuitry with predetermined code to enable the printer (13). The printer has a print station adapted to print the digitized image in relation to authentication information on the receiver. The printer also has a housing to receive cartridge. The CPU (55) provides logical and controlling action to print an image on receiver (30) in relation to authentication information.

USE - Digital camera with printer for printing images of scene on receivers having authentication information.

ADVANTAGE - Effectively images are authenticated, preventing counterfeiting, misuse or fraud. Authentication information is embossed and is formed on stickers which is peeled apart from the receiver and used for number of purposes such as postage stamps .

NOVELTY - A donor element (14), in the form of a web, contains a number of transferable colorants that are thermally printed (10) onto a receiving sheet (12). After images containing authenticating marks, such as a bar-code or official seal, has been formed on the receiving sheet, a protective layer is then applied.

USE - For producing authenticated images such as a sheet of postage stamps.

ADVANTAGE - This printing process prevents counterfeiting, misuse or fraud. The authenticating marks can be formed on a receiver as part of the process, which can be placed in the form of a bar code, official seal alphanumeric data or encoded digitized information.

ABSTRACT EP 1134710 A2

A method for accessing a pre-approved image associated with a user which is stored in a first memory by an authorizing agency and is assigned a particular identification code which is linked to the pre-approved image and for making a document having such pre-approved image, including the steps of the user transferring his or her identification code for the pre-approved image to a receiving agency; the receiving agency accessing the stored pre-approved image using the transferred identification code and transferring such pre-approved image to a second memory; the receiving agency viewing the pre-approved image from the second memory so the receiving agency can verify that the viewed image is authentic; and printing the pre-approved authenticated image, text or graphics from the second memory at the receiving agency as part of a document.

Abstract (Basic): JP 8207361 A

The processor has a keyboard (32) which inputs several data and commands. A controller regulates a printer (30) which outputs several fixed-form layout names which specify a printing appearance. A display outputs a display data to showing several input direction messages accompanied by each fixed-form layout name. A random-access memory stores a registration form data including a form data for printing a text data.

The text data is subordinately fed into each input direction messages. A text memory reads the form data and matches it with the stored text data. A number decision circuit determines whether a number of input character exceeds the number of the setting characters corresp. to each input direction messages of the selected fixed-form layout name. A warning device displays a warning message on the display when the number of input character exceeds the number of the setting characters.

ADVANTAGE - Limits number of characters within max. and prints number of input characters corresp. to input direction messages.

A stamp carrier (30), which moves axially with axial displacement of the handle (10), is held in a cavity (21) of the base (20) under the action of a return spring (40). Axial displacement of the handle causes stamp contact with the surface to be stamped.

A collar (50) adjusts the handle travel. The collar has a cylindrical body (51) and a stop (52), fixed relative to the base (20), for limiting displacement of the handle, mates with a movable stop (12) on the handle. The stops are formed by identical helices and the position of the collar (50) is adjusted by rotation around the helix axis (D).

ADVANTAGE - Involves more limited number of parts than previous stamp supports.

Abstract (Basic): DE 2447650 A

In medical practice a considerable amount of the words and phrases used are constantly repeated for various purposes e.g. on medical records, prescriptions etc. The use of suitably designed printing stamps eases the work of the doctor, and improves the legibility of the writing for the chemist and clearing house. Stamps can be designed for specific applications e.g. prescriptions for the chemist so that with even a limited number of such stamps the efficiency of the practice is improved. The adoption of different coloured printing inks further facilitates ready identification of specialised text. The wording on the stamp can be repeated on the handgrip of the stamp to facilitate its selection.

Abstract (Basic): RD 427091 A

NOVELTY - An algorithm uses a computer Internet provider address, processor identification, time stamp and counter to generate a unique identification (UID) and the Internet provider address, processor identification and time stamp are retrieved from an operating system.

DETAILED DESCRIPTION - The numbers are stored in a buffer as binary data and the buffer is 14 bytes long and can contain nulls, which would make it impossible to use the unique identification as a string. A 'null removal' algorithm scans the buffer and replaces all nulls with a value 0xFF. An address byte (B1) is used to maintain uniqueness and the corresponding bit in B1 is set to zero for each null in the buffer replaced with 0xFF.

USE - Generating a unique identification across multiple computers, processes and threads.

ADVANTAGE - Minimizes the size of the UID and stores it as a string for easier manipulation.

Abstract (Basic): EP 875862 A

The meter comprises a digital print head removable by a user of the postage meter. An electrical connector interfacing with electrical contacts (22) on the print head when the print head is mounted in the postage meter. The print head includes a smart device (23) which stores a unique identification of the print head.

The postage meter includes a sensor port to read the unique identification from the smart device and to determine from the unique identification whether the print head is authorised use in the postage meter and the postage meter is operable to print postage indicia only if the print head is authorised use in the postage meter. The smart device includes a semiconductor device secured to the print head and stores the unique identification of the print head. The semiconductor device is relatively fragile and is secured to the print head in such a manner as to ensure destruction of the semiconductor device in any attempt to remove the semiconductor device from the print head.

ADVANTAGE - Access to print head form removal and replacement may be controlled in secure manner.

Abstract (Basic): GB 2184696 A

The mail processing system, comprises an accounting unit including a processor and a memory in communication with an apparatus for printing, a mechanism for supplying mail pieces to the printer and a mechanism for supplying a statement sheet to the printer. The printing apparatus includes one printer for printing on the mail pieces and a second printer for printing a verifiable statement on the statement sheet. Preferably the memory is non-volatile and contains an identification number and a decoding which postage value can be stored. A device is in communication with the for adjusting the postage value amount in the descending register.

Preferably the first printer is a high speed printer (e.g of the dot matrix type) and the second is a secure printer. The mail piece supply includes an inserter such that inserts can be placed into mail pieces and conveyed to the first printer. A central station may be provided having a second processor and a second memory and an arrangement for establishing a communication link between the central station and the first processor.

ADVANTAGE - Mailer is able to send large quantities or batches of mail without need of on-site inspections by postal service.
